years are the high office of them are paid less than that. Would a collector who could not make more than a few shillings a week, and who was expected to rank high in the profession? What would be the standing of a barrister whose fees did not go beyond that point? What would be the standing of a doctor whose patients did not yield him more than that? This is a very mercantile view of the case, and it is not one that we desire to see the clergy themselves press. But it is a good argument ad hominem, and it is fair as far as one layman to another. The clergy are not a body of men, but a body of professions, and who complain that the clergy are below the intellectual level that should be expected in the pulpit, may as well ask whether the clergy are not kept below the financial level, which good men might reasonably expect, and without which good men will not be continuously obtained. Happily for the pulpit, happily for the pews, men adopt the clerical life with other than mercenary views, and often bring to their work an amount of activity and talent that would have yielded them twice the emolument in many secular pursuits. It is expected of clergymen that they should always be above the world, and that they should subordinate the worldly to the spiritual, but a layman has hardly a right to presume upon this moral devotion, and to claim an intellectual treat every week at half the price he would have to give to a lay lecturer.

The clergy, as will have been seen, have on several points made a good defence against the general indictment preferred against them as a class, but there has been one argument put forward which is certainly not bear investigation, and that is that criticism directed against the pulpit is of itself an impiety, and in fact almost savours of an ecclesiastical offence. There are some who look upon the pulpit, perched with its isolated seat above the level of the pews, as a sort of symbol of intrinsic spiritual superiority, and as giving it the right to be above lay criticism. In their eyes the pulpit is a sort of altar, and the pews, but the pews should never overlook the pulpit. The sacredness which doth hedge about a king is not so great as that which doth hedge about a priest. Those who shelter themselves behind this defence are bound to be bitterly disappointed. They may grow if they will over the degeneracy of the age, but they will never eradicate the layman's tendency to preach occasionally to his preacher, and to criticise his spiritual office. Least of all is this spirit of object submission to be expected in a democratic community. The habit of criticism, if not now almost innate among free people, shows, at any rate, a growing hereditary tendency, and it is simply impossible that a faculty constantly exercised in things secular should be suddenly and completely suspended when the mind is turned towards things sacred. In all our political, commercial, and social institutions, the responsibility of those in authority is a standing rule, and that responsibility carries with it a perpetual liability to criticism. This criticism is often passionate, often unfair, often ignorant, and those who occupy high positions cannot expect in limited society to have their merits fairly estimated at their shortcomings treated with a due allowance for difficulties. It is a penalty men pay for being at all lifted above their fellows that all lifted above their fellows are very often ill-qualified for their self-imposed task. This is unavoidable when everybody is within the pale of the Constitution and has the civic right. The general effect, however, of this universal criticism, painful as it may be to those who suffer by it, is to promote popular education, and in the collision of conflicting opinions a rough sort of justice is generally done to men and their work. But no reasonable man ever expects to be being misjudged, or ever asks that, in order to protect him against it, the mouths of the people should be muzzled.

And what conceivable right has any clergyman to set himself above public criticism, or even to ask that he should be more tenderly dealt with than his fellow-citizens engaged in lay pursuits? The clergy will be, must be, and ought to be criticised, and it is good for them and good for their congregations that they and their work should be continually measured, not only by the common lay standard of success, but by the standard of their own elevated and noble profession. Theological conceit apart, there is nothing in the clergyman's vocation which makes him so superhumanly incapable of error that he should be immune from criticism. Inquire into his fitness or his success. Clergymen who are wise will never make any pretension to this superiority. If they lack this conceit at all, it should be in the selection of the study, and those who indulge in the most there are the least fit to go out of it.

The new bill to deal with oaths and affirmations had at the date of the last meeting passed through committee in the House of Lords, and is therefore by this time in all probability law in the United Kingdom. The passage of this bill is a sign of the times, and it shows the way in which the clergy are steadily marching. More than that, it is a practical criticism by the present British Parliament of the course pursued five years ago, when the measure was successfully made to prevent Mr. Bradlaugh from taking his seat on the ground of his theological, or rather anti-theological opinions. It was one of those successes that prepared the way for subsequent defeat. Backed by his constituents, he appeared again and again, till the objection to him broke down, and now his personal triumph is followed by the enactment of a law which is equivalent to a Parliamentary declaration that he was right in his contention, and that the opposition to him was a Constitutional blunder.

The English people have been for a long time very sturdy believers in oaths, and the exaction of an oath was the favourite method of imposing disabilities on conscientious men. Oaths formed the ingenious barricade that kept non-conformists out of church pulpits, out of the universities, out of Parliament, and out of every Civil office. Oaths in abundance, too, were exacted at the Courts

House and at the Stamps Office, and were looked upon as an adequate security against cheating, while the loyalty of Catholics was put to the test by an oath. The politicians and ecclesiastical who established these oaths thought they had done a very clever thing, but the common sense and the religious feeling of the community has been slowly condemning their policy, and undoing their handiwork. The abundant avowal of a past generation has been gradually melting away, and compulsory oaths have become limited to Parliament, to the Supreme Court, and to some Civil offices. The Quakers were the most pertinacious, not to say the most pugnacious, opponents of what at one time was almost a national policy. It is a difficult question to say when it is right for a good citizen to resist the law, but the Quakers did it in obedience to what they considered a higher law. They went to prison and suffered in person and in purse till a special concession was made to them, and that one concession really carried with it Mr. Bradlaugh's Act that has now followed, although that sequence was slow in working itself out. It has taken half a century for the English people to become consistent in the matter; but they are not a logical people like the French, and they never do drive a principle immediately to its ultimate sequence.

The new law provides that any person may substitute an affirmation for an oath in all places and circumstances where an oath is now required by law, if he objects to the oath on the ground that he has no religious belief, or that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief. It is obvious that this is not the end of the legislation on this subject. It meets the immediate difficulty, but it is only a temporary halting-place. It prevents any person from being under a disability whose statement or whose testimony is required; but it does not give generally the right to substitute an affirmation for an oath. There are many persons who disapprove of oaths, and who would gladly see them abolished, who cannot go so far as to say that an oath is absolutely against their conscience. Such people will still have to take the oath, whether they like it or not; for it is one thing for the policy of a Government to be opposed to one's judgment, and another thing to be one of wearing to be contrary to one's conscience. As it is, the word conscience is often used in rather a lax sense, and it would be certainly dangerous to extend its meaning so far as to cover mere opinion or liking.

The Government of Lord Salisbury held itself neutral with regard to this legislation, and Lord Chancellor Halsbury therefore considered himself entitled to oppose the measure. He held that a person who professed to have no religious belief was not fit to sit in judgment on his fellow-citizens, and he submitted an amendment which was rejected by a large majority. The CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer supported the bill, and was to have moved the second reading, which in his absence was done by Earl Stanhope. The Bishops were mostly conspicuous by their absence. Only one was present, namely, Bishop Goodwin, of Carlisle, and he supported the measure. He said, "Looking at the thing broadly, it certainly seems to me that it is a more important thing to obtain the truth in the way in which a man is prepared to give it, rather than to adopt a plan which made it impossible for some persons to give evidence at all, and put others in a false position,"—a statement which shows that a man may be a Bishop and yet have common sense. He excused the non-attendance of his Episcopal brethren on the ground that they were absent, and he said that he did not regard the measure as a concession to unbelief.

But if the Bishops take this view, there are some leading laymen who do not. Lord Carnarvon thought that the bill "went very near indeed to announcing the doctrine that legislation and religion were to be divorced." The real fact is, that the bill involves no new principle at all, and is simply the further application of a principle already recognised, and which principle will before long be pushed still further; for it is now established that an affirmation is as good as an oath when the person making the affirmation thinks so. The object of the oath is to put the person making the statement under the strongest sense of responsibility. The sanction of the law must either be internal or external, and must derive its virtue either from the conscience of the affirmer, or from the punishment that would follow on falsehood. The conscience of the person is human, and the law providing for punishment is human, and neither of them is supernatural. The attempt to go outside the range of the human to get a supernatural sanction for testimony is an attempt only, and the notion that it is successful is one of those illusions that will gradually disappear.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE English mails per P. and O. Company's steamer Carthage, dated London, 7th December, 1888, will be due on Monday next, in time for delivery to private bookholders and from delivery windows of General Post Office at 9 a.m., per carriers at 11.30 a.m., and per suburban letter carriers at 2 p.m.

THERE was an attendance of about 70 members in the Legislative Assembly yesterday when the Speaker took the chair, and many more came afterwards. The galleries, too, were full, and the space behind the Speaker's chair was crowded. Several documents and returns were laid on the table, and the usual order for their printing was made. Mr. Henry Parkes then rose and was received with cheers from both sides of the House. He stated that he had received a letter from the Governor, asking him, on behalf of Mr. Dibbs, to move that the House adjourn till Tuesday next, which motion he at once made. He took the opportunity to descend upon the state of political affairs generally, and spoke for an hour. He said he had nothing to regret in leaving office, but that it was to him a source of great regret that he was not able to resign. He referred to the case of Mr. Fehon, he contended that from one end of the country to the other the universal opinion was that the Government had been extremely happy in their selection of the Railway Commissioners. He defended the appointment of Mr. Fehon, and said the reason he did not reply to Mr. Watt the other night was because he regarded that gentleman's speech as the leading news.

A MEMORANDUM of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the charges made in connection with the leasing of the Government tramways was held yesterday. The members of the Commission present were Mr. Piche and Mr. Knox. Mr. Lamb being absent through indisposition. The witnesses examined were Mr. Edward Pritchett, contractor; Mr. Henry Gulliver, Mr. Stanley, Mr. Taylor (Messrs. Stanley and Taylor, accountants), and Mr. A. H. McCulloch, Mr. John Woods was re-examined.

The next meeting of the committee will take place on Monday, when Mr. K. King, Mr. W. C. Cowlishaw, Mr. J. McEneaney, and Mr. David Proudfoot will be called to give evidence.

The Minister for Works received yesterday the reports of Mr. G. Gordon, C.E., and Mr. R. L. Mestayer, C.E., with reference to the condition of the Prospect Reservoir. These engineers were appointed, it will be remembered, to inquire into the whole question of the construction and stability of the dam. Both reports were under seal, and that of Mr. Gordon was accompanied by a map. The reports will be opened to-day, and in all probability submitted to a meeting of the Cabinet. Should it be deemed advisable they will be laid upon the table of the Legislative Assembly on Tuesday next.

REVOLUTION IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

ENGLISH AND FRENCH MISSION STORES DESTROYED.

THE KING OF UGANDA IMPRISONED. THREATENED EXTERMINATION OF MISSIONARIES.

(BY CABLE.) (FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, JAN. 11. News has reached London to the effect that a revolution has broken out in the territory of the King of Uganda, Central Africa.

The English and French mission stores at Uganda, besides letters intended for Stanley and Emin Bey, were destroyed. Mwanga, the King of Uganda, has been imprisoned by the Arabs, who threaten to exterminate all the missions in Central Africa in revenge for England's anti-slavery policy.

The English missionaries are safe.

TOTAL WRECK OF THE SHIP BENAN.

ALL HANDS SAVED. At a late hour last night we received an official memorandum by telegraph from the Postmaster-General of Western Australia, at Perth, announcing that the iron ship Benan, Captain Burns, cod laden from Cardiff to Hongkong, was totally wrecked off Point Coates, Western Australia, on the night of December 30. All hands, numbering 28, reached the shore safely, and were taken on board the cutter Gipsy near Manda's Landing. They are expected to reach Cairnarrow, W. A., daily.

[The Benan was an iron British ship of 1338 tons register, built at Glasgow by Messrs. Brown, Beith & Co. in 1870, and was the property of Messrs. W. Thomson and Co., of Leith.]

THE POLITICAL SITUATION IN TASMANIA.

[BY TELEGRAPH.] (FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.) HOBART, FRIDAY. Surprise was caused to-day when Ministers announced in the Assembly that they intended to go on without further taxation, as they did not think it was needed at present. They declined to ask for a dissolution, holding that they were quite entitled to shelve any taxation proposals. The leader of the Opposition moved the adjournment of the House till the evening, to consult with his party on the unexpected announcement. In the evening the leader of the Opposition said the position of the Ministry was unconstitutional. The Opposition would use every means to prevent the passing of any supplies beyond those necessary to carry on till a general election could be held.

THE WEATHER.

For the past few days thoroughly summer weather has prevailed. Light airs and calms have predominated throughout the colony, with an occasional sky and a high temperature. Yesterday, as will be seen from the telegrams given below, the heat in several parts of the colony exceeded in intensity previous records for this summer. Not so, however, was it here in the metropolis. The maximum here was 81° Fahr., and that is between two and three degrees less than has been registered this summer. It was generally felt, however, to be a most oppressive day, due no doubt to the presence of a more than ordinary amount of moisture in the atmosphere. What appeared more like smoke than haze or fog hung over the harbour in the afternoon to such a degree as to interfere with the signalling of the wharves. A little or no wind prevailed throughout the day; what there was from the north-east. At midnight there was slight fog about, but clear overhead.
